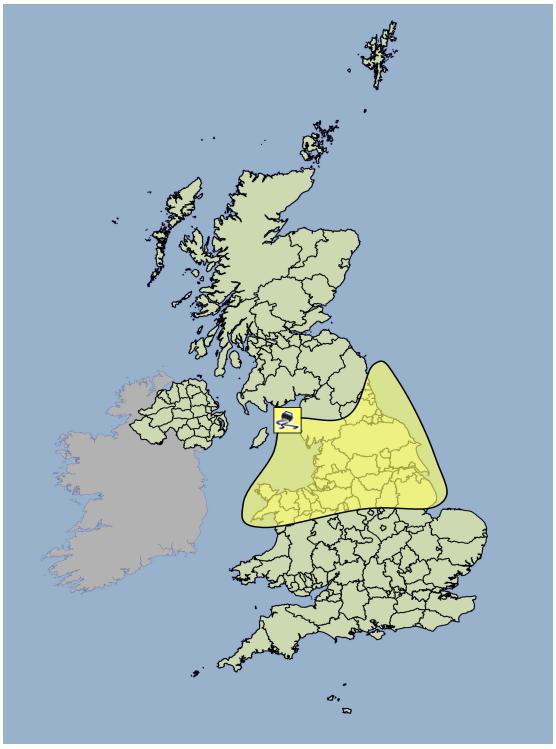
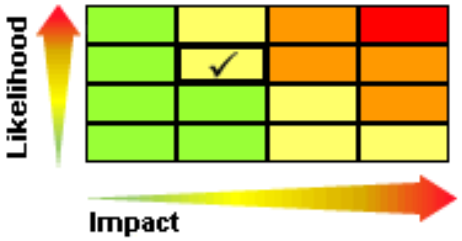
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A cold front will clear from northern England, the north Midlands and north Wales during Friday evening, followed by clearing skies and air cold enough to allow surfaces to freeze. In addition, scattered showers of rain, sleet and hill snow will may cause some wash-off of any road treatments already applied.

The chance of disruption will gradually diminish on Saturday morning as temperatures start to rise, although with wintry showers likely to continue.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Sat, 30th Jan 2016 until 10:00 on Sat, 30th Jan 2016

As a band of rain clears away southeastward during Friday evening, temperatures are expected to fall sharply. This will lead to a chance of ice forming on untreated roads and pavements.

In addition, wintry showers are expected during Friday night.

Be aware that some low-level disruption looks likely.
